MOST SIGNIFICANT CARTOON—February 12, 1957

"The Spirit of Lincoln" by Hungerford has been chosen by the Foundation committee as the most significant cartoon to appear on February 12, 1957.

The Hungerford study was one of fifteen selected cartoons submitted to the committee. The winning cartoon was first published by the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette on February 12, 1957 and it is reproduced in this issue of Lincoln Lore with the permission of the publisher of that newspaper.

Since 1945 a Foundation committee has selected the most significant Lincoln cartoon and the winner the first year was a Hungerford drawing bearing the title "Spirit of Lincoln." The themes of the 1945 and 1957 cartoons are practically identical, with the first drawing dealing with a "Big Three Conference" while the current one depicts Lincoln appearing before wrangling delegates in a "United Nations Conference Room."

A description of the remaining fourteen cartoons submitted to the committee this year for study follows:

ABE'S A LIKABLE LAD

MOST TIMELY EDITORIAL—February 12, 1957

LINCOLN WAS A REALIST

Dr. Allan Nevins in his thought-provoking book, "The Statesmanship of the Civil War," quotes the French historian Mignet in his account of the French revolution:

"A man is sometimes a mere feather in an upheaval which carries away the masses; the surge sweeps him along, or leaves him overwhelmed behind; he must keep in advance or be trampled under foot."

Nevins then approvingly applies Mignet's definition to Abraham Lincoln, who he finds virtually alone exhibits statesmanship in the Civil war. (Only Robert E. Lee in the South truly showed genuine statesmanship. Jefferson Davis possessed none and Judah P. Benjamin very little.)

Could the North, despite its overwhelming weight of population and industrial and financial resources, have won without Lincoln's leadership?

As it was, Lee's excellent military skill came near to matching the North's tremendous and seemingly overwhelming preponderance of economic might. The war then was virtually a duel between Lincoln's statesmanship and Lee's martial ability. Statesmanship won.

What was the nature of Lincoln's statesmanship? Or first, what problems did he face? Lincoln had won the presidential nomination over Seward, largely because the New York senator had committed himself irrevocably on the question of slavery with his prediction concerning an "irrepressible conflict." Moderates felt he had gone too far to be an acceptable candidate. It is true that Lincoln in his "House Divided" speech had insisted that "the Union cannot permanently endure half slave and half free," which later seemed excuse enough for South Carolina and six sister states to secede before Lincoln's inauguration. But the 1860 Republican platform did not indorse abolition nor did Lincoln in his inaugural address threaten emancipation. In fact, for two years Lincoln pressed congress to appropriate money for compensated liberation of the slaves.

His problems were highly complex because his supporters were of every shade of opinion on the slave issue. A mixture of voters had supported Lincoln—fanatic Abolitionists, Free Soilers with others who opposed the spread of slavery to the Western territories, and also moderates, totally fed up on arrogant Southern domination of the federal government but unwilling yet to interfere with the South's "peculiar institution."

However, the attack on Fort Sumter temporarily eclipsed all issues but loyalty to the Union. The foremost goal of Lincoln was to hold the border slaves states, Kentucky and Missouri, if he would save the Union. Hence he firmly revoked an abortive "emancipation proclamation" by Federal Gen. Fremont in Missouri, this to the rage of the Abolitionists.

In his monumental letter to Horace Greeley on this point Lincoln wrote:

"My paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union, and is not either to save or destroy slavery—If I could save the Union without freeing any slave I would do it, and if I could do it by freeing all the slaves I would do it; and if I could do it by freeing some and leaving some others alone I would also do that—What I do about slavery, and the colored race, I do because it helps to save the Union. . . ."

It is very clear: Lincoln was a realist, not a sentimentalist. He was practical. He was filled with no sense of conviction that he was the answer to the nation's prayer for a leader in the emergency. He said bluntly that he had not controlled events but that events had controlled him.

Nevins quotes Nicolay and Hay, Lincoln's secretaries and biographers, as calling Lincoln a "great opportunist," in the "good sense of the word before the term 'opportunism' was invented."

In short, Lincoln had an amazing sense of timing, a realistic knowledge when to act and when to forebear.

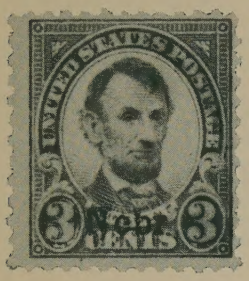
He knew the exact hour when it was time to shift position from his original object of saving the Union to freeing the slaves, which he had hoped for since his youth. He sensed precisely when public opinion would support that shift. This change of opinion in what was the chief aim of the war was so subtle and yet so progressive and dominating that only a statesman like Lincoln knew when to adjust to it.

Lincoln kept in advance; he was not trampled under foot. That was the leadership which both saved the Union and freed the slaves. That is true statesmanship, at its highest and noblest level.

Oregon Journal—2-12-57

This Oregon Journal editorial was chosen by the Foundation committee, from a selected group of twenty editorials, as the most timely appraisal of Abraham Lincoln to appear during the anniversary month of the Sixteenth President's birth. It was written by Arthur L. Crookham, former city editor and former associate editor of the editorial page. Mr. Crookham, who is now retired, has been a Lincoln student most of his life.

3-CENT LINCOLN—Issue of 1922-26



Scott 672

This 3-cent Lincoln stamp is one of twenty-one ordinary postage stamps first released in 1922-23, to replace the regular issue known as the "Series of 1912."

The 3-cent denomination bears a portrait of Abraham Lincoln, from a photograph taken at Washington, D. C., September 2, 1864, by Mathew Brady (same portrait as 5-cent blue, 1902-3, Lincoln Lore, April 1957).

The portrait is "within an oval and partly enclosed in a panel which is supported on either side by acanthus scrolls." Above the portrait in a curved line appear the words "United States Postage" in white Roman letters. The name "Lincoln" appears on the ribbon below the portrait, and under this, at the bottom of the stamp appears the word "cents." In both lower corners within ovals with dark backgrounds is the white numeral "3." "The entire stamp is enclosed within a cross-line border with the small triangular ornaments in both upper corners."

Printed in purple ink "the 3-cent Lincoln was first placed on sale at Washington, D. C., and Hodgenville, Larue County, Ky., the birthplace of the former President Lincoln, on his birthday, February 12, 1923."
